Guizot alone, of modern historians, follows strictly Montglat's account.--History of France, IV 236. It has been left for a recent writer, M Cheruel, to clearly demonstrate, by reference to a manuscript contemporaneous journal, the impossibility of the king's making use of such words as I am the state at this particular time. Having reviewed the tendencies of Parliament after the wars of the Fronde, M. Cheruel adds, It is here that a suspicious tradition has fixed the appearance of Louis XIV. before Parliament, dressed for the chase, and whip in hand, and that the famous answer to the president has been attributed to him, I am the state! In place of this dramatic scene, which has become graven in historic memory, the most authentic documents exhibit the king imposing silence upon Parliament, but without the affectation of an insolent hauteur. He then quotes from the manuscript journal written by a partisan of the Parliament, who would have reproduced any circumstances unfavorable to the king, had such occurred. The account closes with these words: The king, rising quickly before any one could reply to him, returned to the Louvre, and from there to the forest of Vincennes, which he had left in the morning, and where the Cardinal (Mazarin) awaited him. --Histoire de l'administration monarchique en France, II. 32. We here have a description of the event clothed in its simplest terms. The king, hunting in the forest of...
