Excerpt: .and then it may be continued in five-minim doses three or four times daily for its alterative effect, unless debility is marked. Phytolacca is indicated specifically wherever the glands or glandular organs are involved. It is an active alterative and restorative in addition to its influence upon the functional action of all glandular structure. It is given conjointly with other indicated remedies. Podophyllin may be given in very small doses with phytolacca and also whenever the liver and spleen are involved. It should not be permitted to irritate the gastro-intestinal tract. Berberis aquifolium is a remedy of value as auxiliary to other measures when the skin is involved and when pimples, pustules, bullae, vesicles or skin abscesses appear as a result of the infection. This remedy is given to good advantage when so indicated with small doses of the carbonate of iron. Quinin should be given in toxaemia, when the temperature is not too high. It is a stimulant and tonic of much value. Strychnin or strychnin arsenate are valuable for regular administration. During a period of extreme weakness, exhaustion or threatened collapse hypodermoclysis with the normal salt solution should be resorted to. It is profoundly stimulating in its influence, but of no less importance is its influence in antagonizing the micro-organisms and their toxins in the blood, and in effecting their elimination. From one-half to two or more pints can be used, much care being exercised in its administration every day in extreme cases....
